Do I need a licence?

Under the Dairy Act 2000, any person operating a dairy manufacturing business at a premises located in Victoria must hold a current and valid dairy manufacturer licence with DFSV.

The licence must be held by the person (legal entity) in charge of operating the business and therefore ultimately responsible for the safety of the dairy food produced.

The licence issued to manufacturers is a vital component of DFSV's licensing system which provides whole-of-chain traceability from production to distribution and also prevents unregulated entry to the industry.

Please note:

- Manufacture includes processes such as cutting, slicing, grating and packaging.
- A Memorandum of Understanding between DFSV, Department of Health, the Municipal Association of Victoria and PrimeSafe outlines which authority is responsible for the licensing or registration of food businesses. This includes mixed businesses — those that undertake a range of activities, for example, the manufacture or distribution of dairy food products and non-dairy food products.

If you require clarification about your intended business, processes or products please contact us.
